

Introducing Interface's Mental Health & Trauma Treatment's Phoenix Project

Through this new program, Interface will engage school personnel and parents countywide about the impact of wildfire-related trauma and the warning signs of trauma on youth (K-12). In addition to educating individuals, Interface will provide evidence-based mental health services to students impacted by the 2018 Thomas and Woolsey Fires.

We are open now & taking referrals!

Please contact Intake
at 805-485-6114, ext. 662
or email intake@icfs.org
or visit www.icfs.org

QUICK FACTS

- Research shows children experience severe reactions to stress following a natural disaster and youth have a greater risk than adults to develop mental health conditions, if not treated.
- Children who have been impacted by a natural disaster can often have physiological, emotional, and behavioral reactions that can impact their daily lives.

If you or someone you know has been impacted by the 2018 fires and may be exhibiting emotional and psychological distress, we ask that you contact us.

Find additional updates on the 211 Information & Assistance website
Here

In Partnership with SAMHSA